I love this man's story & never tire of hearing it

By Chris

I read the story "Escape from Red China" by Robert Loh book many years ago [over & over] until it just fell apart in my hands. The same will probably happen again & I will probably reorder again at a future date. I love this man's story & never tire of hearing it. Robert Loh's story is unique in that even though he had a American degree, he was able to use the Communists teachings within the system to avoid the death camps, firing squads & endless persecution that so many of his friends endured. [although he did not go entirely unscathed. I won't ruin it for you though, you have to read the book! ;D] He tells the story of being a very optimistic, starry eyed & bushy tailed young man going back to the homeland at the end of the Second World War with nothing but endless passion & hopes for the future. Although his father could easily see through all the Communist rhetoric & warned him repeatedly about the Communists obsession with control, the young man, Robert, refused to listen as he thought his old pa was just from another generation & didn't understand. It wasn't long until he soon out dad was right, of course & once coming to that breakthrough had to devise a way to escape where he wouldn't get caught & none of his friend would suffer for being friends with him. It's an excellent book in that while reading it, you never know what's going to happen to Loh [I don't think he did either!] from day to day & it's up to his own cleverness & ingenuity to stay alive & one step ahead of the game. For me, it was a real page turner & it makes you wonder about his life here in America. [did he ever marry? have any kids, grandkids? ect ect] He's not listed in Wiikipedia so I couldn't find any info about him.] Anyway, it's a gripping book & I highly recommend it to anyone wanting to read about that time when Mao & the Communist Party 1st took over China. [nothings changed all these many years later, it's still the same]
